A Picture's Worth a Thousand Words

Picture this: You've just wrapped up a three-hour meeting with some difficult clients and you know you won't be leaving the office any time soon. Your work has just doubled and your deadline has been cut in half. Why do you put up with this? What makes it worthwhile (other than the benefits, vacation, and bonuses)? As you begin to go over the file for the umpteenth time, your eyes drift over to the picture of your family. Suddenly, you remember why you work. Because you have to take care of the ones you love. Having that picture in your office reminds you constantly that you love them and they love you.

When giving your loved one a photo of yourself, there are a few things to keep in mind. If they're going to put it in their office, don't give them one that's intended for their eyes only (although it would give the employees something to talk about). If you do give a "private" photo, let it be known it is not to be shared, no matter how good they think you look!

Several types of pictures can express your love. They can be done professionally, by a friend, or set up by you. You might want to pose or have candid shots. The pictures you give may not have been taken for any reason except that you were on vacation and wanted a record of it. Any photo of yourself that you give to your cherished will say I love you every time they look at it.

Here are some photographic ideas that would create instant, "I love you's":

- Get a black and white boudoir photo taken of you—sexy!
- Have a photo taken of the two of you with a huge heart as the background.

Jennifer Erchul

- Take pictures of you holding a sign that reads, “I love you.”
- Engage in a glamour photo shoot. Chances are you don’t look like that every day, so your recipient will know the extra effort you put into your love shot.
- Cut a photo of you into puzzle type pieces. Mail your lover one piece every day until they've got the whole picture.

Have fun with it and let your love shine through. Everyone’s got a good side; give yours to your lover with a smile.

Make a Date

Sounds simple enough, doesn't it? You've probably gone on several dates. Why would this be any different? Because you intend, expect, and plan it to be different. This is the date you'll use to say, "I love you". This date will be remembered and cherished for a long time to come, especially if you heed a few suggestions:

Jennifer Erchul

Instead of this ...	Try this ...
Catching a movie at the huge Cineplex	Wait until dusk and go to the drive-in
Walking or running laps at the local track	Pack a picnic and go for a day-long hike
Sitting on the couch separately reading the paper	Go for a bike ride that ends at the ice-cream parlor
Ordering take-out and renting a movie	Dress up in your finest duds and make reservations at a swanky restaurant; order for each other and then dance the night away
Going to the sports bar to watch the game	Road trip to the game
Sitting inside when the snow is falling	Go for a sleigh ride that ends with hot chocolate around a roaring fire
Spending the evening saying, "What do you want to do?" "I don't care." "What do you want to do?" "I don't care."	Plan a date in advance; include all the details and don't do anything you typically would
Planning your average Saturday night get-together	Rent some scooters and explore your area
Going to dinner and a movie	Get desserts and go to the zoo.
Breakfast at the local fast-food joint	Find a hotel with a revolving restaurant; drink mimosas while watching your city wake up

Ways to Say I Love You

Use this date to explore new things together. Plan it together or surprise him with it. Either way, it's sure to be a good time. You'll create more memories, share more firsts, develop new interests and love more deeply if you practice making dates a bit more spectacular. You can still have your comfortable, "done it a hundred times" dates. They only make the special ones that much more memorable.
