Chapter 2

"Where Is God?"

God, the Creator, is called many names and has revealed himself (or itself) to many cultures throughout time, ever since the beginning of humanity. He has revealed himself to people through their mind's eye in a way that they could individually understand, according to their evolution and their culture. A truly honest to God, good person, can and will find God on their own path, with their own heart. They will learn to either hear the voice from the White Light of peacefulness or the voice will choose to speak to that person by force.

Some people are forced to listen to God. Some people must seek out to find God. God is not prejudice against any specific culture or religion. He does what he can to reach people through what they understand and perceive.

God is something to be found in the heart, not in a book. Many books are God-inspired and inspire one to look deeper into their own heart to find God. They are nothing more than road signs. Preachers are nothing more than road signs. And many road signs are false road signs, unknowingly popping up without notice or recognition. They are put there to make people spin in circles, never really getting anywhere in their quest to be at one with God.

False signs are there to keep people from looking into their own hearts. They keep people from praying to God directly, so that they are forced to look onto other people to do the praying for them. So long as they aren't dizzy anymore, why should they care if their spiritual leaders really know God or not?

People are tired from the endless dance of life that leads them away from their spirit. The exhaustion is too much, so they look to others to tell them what to do, what to believe, and how to pray. If they would quit spinning in circles and just listen to the stillness. If there is only clutter and confusion to be heard, then listen and sort it all out until there is stillness. In that stillness is where God awaits to be heard.

No preacher and no human has the authority to tell you what to believe and make you think that you will go to Hell if you don't believe their interpretation of the Bible. God is the only one with the authority to cast a soul in to Hell, so why do you allow others to tell you that you will go to Hell if you disagree with them? Why do you allow others to take God's responsibility to make that decision? They don't know. Only God knows. If someone thinks that they can make a judgment on the behalf of God, they deem themselves worthy of being God. That is exactly the same attitude that Satan had when he tried to take over God's position in Heaven before Michael cast him out of Heaven.

Listen closely. NO HUMAN BEING HAS THE AUTHORITY TO DECIDE THE FATE OF YOUR SOUL! It is up to YOU to find GOD and it is up to GOD to decide if you are to go to Hell or not. Preachers do not have this authority. They can't find God for you. They can't decide whether you go to Heaven or to Hell. That is between God and the individual. You do not need a go-between.

Preachers and religious control-freaks have been dreading the day that they lose their power. When people decide that they love their God more than their religious leaders, it is then that the religious leaders are exposed for the frauds and idols that they are. So you who are into the mind-control business dread people like me, because I believe in freedom. I believe that you don't need anyone except yourself, to find God and to walk with him. And you certainly do not need churches for anything other than for charity work or for gossip exchange.

This is directed to those who apply, which are many: Quit dragging religion into charity! Just help them! Quit manipulating them with religion in your charity trade. You give them charity and then choke them with what you think is the right way to think. Let them be who they are and just love them. If they want religion, they will find it on their own. Charity should be ONLY about helping those in need. It should be about filling the needs that the needy know that they have, not the needs that you imagine that they have. Ask them what they need. Don't assume that they want anything more than their physical needs met. Quit using pity as a reason to brainwash people.

I bring FREEDOM. I bring the freedom to find God without the aide of bossy, over-dominating religions. Preachers haven't liked me ever since I was a kid, when I told them that I have seen God and have heard him speak and that I do not need a preacher telling me what God has to say or what he wants of me. The first preacher I told was my cousin. He was the only one that didn't condemn me or ridicule me for my attitude or my visions of God. That may have been out of respect for me as a family member. I don't know. But every other "churchy" person that I have talked to has disliked me because I teach that you can find God without going to church and without someone reading the Bible to you.

You can definitely find God without someone telling you what to believe. I find that most churches are no different than the synagogues that Jesus rejected, with the fancy men dressed in fancy clothes, taking money and bossing people around with fear tactics. What gives them the authority to decide whether your soul is damned or saved? You have the authority to follow your heart, your instincts, and your own path. You will more likely find God in the middle of nowhere while you are alone than in some gathering of conceited, money-grabbing, gossiping, spiritual weaklings.

Religion is a way to control people and a way for people to pretend that they are a god (with all of their followers being too lazy to question their interpretations of the Bible or whatever other religious text they may be following). They are too lazy to find the truth for themselves and want to take someone else's word for it and let them have control over their soul.

I bring the freedom to follow your heart and listen with your spirit- not to my words or to words of religious leaders. Listen with YOUR spirit. Listen to what is deep inside you soul. The freedom is to follow your own path without the fear of going to a lake of fire for all eternity for refusing to take a preacher's word over the words that your heart tells you. Pick up a book. Read it yourself. Or simply meditate and ask for guidance. Believe what feels right to you. And don't enforce it onto others. Everyone is different and must find the light in their own way. Respect one another. And if you prefer the dark ways, then so be it. It is your choice. Just accept that everyone is different and no one way is the ultimate way to follow for every single individual.

I bring you the freedom to find your soul without fear of who is controlling it. YOU control it. You walk your own path. You listen to YOUR heart. But don't forget. You can't pass judgment on your own soul or on anyone's soul for that matter. That is a job beyond our understanding.
