First Edition

Dedicated to the Crystal Mountain Professional Ski Patrol whose stories and experiences, triumphs and tribulations provided inspiration for this book.

Wiley A. Valanche had big dreams. With school behind him, Wiley gazed ahead at a path of greatness. One day his father asked the big question: "What are you going to do with yourself? It's time for you to move out." He glanced at Wiley's mother. "Your mother wants to turn your room into a bedazzling studio."

The young man longed for intrigue and mystery; he hoped for a career with prestige and power; he fancied rubbing elbows with the big wigs. "I know what I want to do--" Wiley began.

"You should be an accountant," his mother interrupted.

"Maybe a software engineer," his father countered.

"How about the President of the United States?" his little sister, Ava, chimed in.

Wiley and his parents all looked at Ava and said, "Don't be silly Ava, nobody wants that job."
