Chapter 1 – A Petite Giant Killer

We can do all things through Him [Jesus,] who strengthens me, Philippians 4: 15

The children of Israel were dealing with a flesh and blood enemy Goliath whose size alone struck fear into the hearts of experienced adult warriors, 1 Samuel 17. The men turned and fled in fear. King David, yet a youth at that time, heard the boasting of the enemy. His faith in God led him to ask the men around him what gifts would he receive if he slew the giant. The men mocked and taunted David, including his own family. When Goliath saw David, he also scorned him because of his youth and size.

However, it is written that David knew and trusted Yahovah, our heavenly father and God. Goliath told David come on so I can kill you. David said I'm coming but I am coming in the name of the Lord whom you have insulted. David ran towards the enemy and killed him with a stone.

It wasn't the stone. It was David's faith in God that gave him the victory.

Pilar Garcia's story is reminiscent of a current day David fighting Goliath. Standing a mere 4' 11", her battle against death, her spiritual Goliath, has spanned five decades.

Born in Ecuador, Pilar is now 72.

Pilar wanted to be a nun when she was young. She always believed in God because her aunts and uncles were the first missionaries in Ecuador. They often took her with them on their missions. However, her life would run a different course.

At the age of 22, she was on the plane that was kidnapped and taken to Cuba.

“Money was required by the government to be paid before the planes would be released,” Pilar stated. “An additional price was charged for American citizens.”

However, during the initial flight, she sensed something was wrong when she looked out of the window. She knew from previous trips they should have been flying over the mountains to their next destination to catch another plane to the United States. Instead they were flying over the ocean. She asked the stewardess what was going on. She admitted that they had been hijacked. Then, without warning, the man sitting next to Pilar pulled out a gun. He was one of the hijackers. Over the past few years, Pilar said she had heard that some of the hijackers are now living in the United States.

“I tried to find them on Facebook,” Pilar said. “I couldn’t locate them.”

At the time of the hijacking, Pilar was living in the United States, but she often went back to Ecuador for vacation. When the plane landed in Cuba, they were not allowed to leave the airport. She was not yet married. However, she was ready to fight for her freedom.

A devout Catholic from childhood she knew God would protect her. She was 22 at the time. Some of the younger girls, ages 17 to 18, looked to her for strength. They were in Cuba for almost a week. During that time, they did not have a change of clothes. Pilar showed them how to wash their clothes and especially their underwear in the bathroom. One night they heard a strange sound. It was Pilar who opened the door to confront the possible attacker.

She returned home to the United States.

Death tried to sneak up on Pilar again. Although it was her first pregnancy, she kept trying to tell the doctor that something was wrong in her stomach. They insisted that she was simply homesick. She staunchly maintained her position and kept telling them that was not the problem. Her complaint was ignored. The baby was born in March of 1971. However, the pain in her stomach continued for another three months.

“At times it was so bad I felt like I was dying,” Pilar stated.

Her husband kept insisting that she needed to go to Ecuador to see a doctor. She prepared to leave but she was so sick that she felt she was not going to make it. Then out of the blue, one of the doctors called her and asked her to come to the hospital right away.

“I was in so much pain that the mere touch of the sheets over my body hurt,” Pilar said.

They took her to surgery and opened her up. But then told her that there was nothing they could do. In their opinion, she was going to die after they informed her what was wrong with her stomach.

Her stomach was full of pus. They could not even decide what to do because of the extent of the infection. The doctors gave her 24 hours to live. Pilar said about 40 doctors from teaching colleges came to see her and study her body because they could not figure out why she was still alive. They admitted that they had never seen this type of infection. They said it was a form of gangrene and had spread throughout her entire body. They hooked her up to tubes to drain the infection. Ten 5-gallon bottles later, they still could not figure out what it was or what had caused this type of infection. Pilar said it was the color of yellow egg yolks. She was in the hospital for three months because her gallbladder had also become infected. Every day, for about three months, the doctors would come into her hospital room and tell her that she had perhaps one more day to live.

"I prayed continually and asked God to heal me because I had a new daughter to raise," Pilar calmly stated.

In other words, she did not pray just for herself so she could just live. She knew the importance of raising her daughter. My ears have heard many testimonies from women over the years. And many are yet so traumatized by the past, they can barely talk. Pilar's Faith in God was so deep that she might as well have been talking about a kitchen recipe.

A second surgery was performed. The infection was still in her body but not as bad. The tubes, that had been draining the infection, had been in her for such an extended length of time that it hurt to pull them out.

Pilar was told not to have any more children. It was the doctor's consensus that it was the pregnancy that had caused the infection. Two years later she became pregnant again. The doctors insisted that she have an abortion.

Like David, Pilar stood her ground. She said no. She knew it was a miracle that she was even pregnant. Therefore, she was going to have this baby. It was a costly decision. She broke out in hives all over her entire body.

"I looked like a monster," Pilar stated.

When it was time for the baby's birth, she started bleeding extensively.

"I could hear the doctors saying that I was going to die," she said. "In my mind, I said no, I will not die. I kept praying that God would allow me to live because I had two children now to take care of."

God heard. She lived. The doctors told her husband to have a vasectomy.

Pilar and her husband had met and married in the United States. He was also from Ecuador. After the second child was born, he had started working for Dole pineapple Company. After getting his bachelor's degree, they moved back to Ecuador.

Life was normal for about 15 years. During this time, they had established a relationship with a friend who was a doctor. Pilar and her husband were godparents to his children. Suddenly one morning Pilar woke up with a feeling as though something sharp was in her throat.

She thought it was her tonsils. This doctor took her complaint serious and sent her to a cancer doctor. The diagnosis came back. She was in the last stages of throat cancer. And it was in the glands in her throat. They did a biopsy. Rather than rely on anyone, Pilar said she went to the pathologist to get her own report.

"I lied to get it," Pilar said. "I wanted to know for myself.

She asked the doctor how long she had to live. He stated three weeks. She said what about surgery. The surgeon told her there was no hope. Pilar, the petite Giant Killer, did not take no for an answer. After informing the surgeon that God was her hope and the Lord has the last word, she insisted on having the surgery.

She called a couple of members of her family, of whom one is a deacon, to tell the family to be at her mother's home that evening. The family came. Pilar called her dining room table the roundtable for family conversations.

She still does this at her home in the senior community in which she lives. Sometimes it is just girl talk. Sometimes it is for bible study groups.

Pilar told the family about the throat cancer. Her pituitary gland was also infected. Stranger still, the doctors said the cancer had started in her ovaries but spread to her throat.

Initially, the family wanted her husband to send her back to the United States. Pilar said no. The doctors had informed her that she needed a period of rest or she would bleed to death during the surgery. She also told her family that the country did not matter.

She explained to the family that if the Lord wanted her to be alive it would be so.

The petite but gentle Giant Killer stood firm.

Unlike King David's brothers, her family did not mock her. They finally understood because she had raised them to know God. They accepted her explanation. They prayed.

Talking to God was not strange to the family because both Pilar and her husband utilized prayer in every situation whether it was thanking God, or asking for help.

Privately, Pilar said she prayed to the Lord for a message.

"I am going to open my bible," she said she told God. "Please show me, give me a sign because I still have daughters to raise."

He answered.

She opened her Bible. It was the book of Isaiah, chapter 38, where Hezekiah was sick and about to die. God had heard his plea and extended his life for 15 more years. However, there was something more that God had the prophet tell Hezekiah.

Pilar picked up on this divine direction and utilized it to heal her body thousands of years after this biblical miracle with Hezekiah. In other words, God is unchanged in his love and care for those who trust him and believe in him.

Hezekiah's illness was due to boils. And the prophet Isaiah had told him to make a plaster of figs and lay them on the boils.

Pilar followed suit. The next day after reading the Scripture she went to the Farmer's market. However, figs were not in season. And in Ecuador, figs are usually used for Passover.

Nevertheless, God was in control. A lady whom she knew from years before called out to her that she had figs. The next step was to prepare them.

People were available who would prepare them for her. But, Pilar wanted to do it herself because it was God's message specifically to her. She boiled the figs until they were soft like smashed potatoes.

Psalms 37: 4-5

Remember, the cancer had started in her ovaries.

"I laid the plaster on my stomach that morning and left it on all day," Pilar said. "Then, I waited until my period came."

After getting ready for the surgery, her friend the doctor said do not let them do a biopsy on the tumors on her ovaries and the glands. At first the surgeon refused to operate. Then for some reason, he came back to Pilar and said that he didn't know why, but he would do the surgery. She also let him do the biopsy.

"Afterwards, I felt that literally I had a pain in my soul, just as her friend Otto had said," Pilar said. "I started crying. I didn't know what to think."

But God was still in control.

The surgeon who would perform her operation always prayed prior to surgery, and for his patients before operating. After the surgery was completed, the doctor told her there was literally a line inside of her body, almost as though it had been drawn with a pencil. The surgeon told Pilar that he took everything out below the line, including her fallopian tubes, her uterus, and ovaries. After the surgery, all lab tests showed that she no longer needed chemo for cancer. The cancer was gone.

Pilar recovered and raised her daughters.

Pilar returned to the United States. However, she started feeling bad in her stomach area again. The doctors had told her there was nothing wrong. Their diagnosis for her illness was that she was emotionally suffering from the loss of her husband. She flew back to Ecuador.

"Again, I felt so sick," she said. "It felt like I was going to die, again."

The doctors did a complete checkup. Her blood pressure was okay. Her sugar levels were okay. They didn't give up. They decided that an endoscopy was needed to find the source of her pain. She stayed at her brother's house. He was the only sibling still alive in Ecuador.

The procedure was recorded. The rest of the family was in a viewing room and could see what was happening.

The doctors discovered twenty polyps in her stomach. The recording showed that when the doctor opened up her stomach, the nurse made a face from the stench of the infection. The year was 2012. The doctors could not understand how she had been able to get on a plane and fly to Ecuador. The pressure alone could have caused the polyps to explode. They said it was a miracle that she survived.

Pilar, the petite giant killer, had no problem in telling them how she survived. She emphatically stated that it was the Lord who had kept her. Once she was back in the United States, Pilar tried to show the recording of the procedure to her American doctors. They refused to even look at it.

She stayed in Ecuador for three weeks. They gave her medication for six months because they knew the same medication was not available in the United States. She revisited Ecuador in 2014.

During these times that her life was in jeopardy, her faith never wavered. When asked did she ever wonder why she had to endure so much, and did her family's faith grow, Pilar responded as follows.

"I have believed since childhood that God loved me," Pilar stated. "They [the family] watched my faith hold steadfast no matter what the situation was. Now as adults, they tell me my faith taught them to do the same. However, if I were allowed to ask God one question, it would be this. Why do people who are mean and selfish seem to have a life void of pain."

I understand her question. But, one thing that I can declare as one who grew up without the benefit of instruction by a true godly family. Her family's dedication to teaching her about God when she was a child made the difference in her trust in God.

Now 72, Pilar is still going strong despite the enemy's attempt to take her out. More so, her I.P.S. system simply got stronger with each attack.

The knowledge of God is the fertilizer for the I.P.S. system that is within every woman. For those who do not receive this nourishment at an early age, the journey to complete reliance upon the I.P.S. system is more perilous. In fact, sometimes it takes another Damascus Fall to make God's point clear about its necessity for this battle.

Chapter 1 – Study Guide

1. Pilar heard about God since she was a child, from her parents and grandparents.
2. Do you think this is why she was able to trust God all through her life as an adult, even when her life was at stake?
3. Do you know of someone who trusted God regardless of life?
 - a. Think on, and/or discuss how it affected your walk of faith.

Notes:

Chapter 7 – A Real Wonder Woman Dresses in God's Armor

The divine influence of Faith upon the heart, and its reflection in one's life, is sufficient, for His power is made complete in weakness, 2 Corinthians 12: 9.

William Moulton Marston created the character of Wonder Woman in 1941. Various interviews indicate that he had a very clear idea for the personality of his character. One particular article quotes him as stating:

“Wonder Woman is psychological propaganda for the new type of woman who should, I believe, rule the world,” he said. “He further argued that the only hope for civilization is the greater freedom, development and equality of women in all fields of human activity.”

Marston was right on target with God's creation of and the purpose of the woman. However, his lifestyle indicated that he lived outside the commandments of God. According to another interview, one of his wives suggested the female super wonder woman character. He had two wives.

A debilitating medical problem that cannot be healed is unimaginable for those of us who have not lived with such an issue. And yet, to maintain faith in Jesus in that situation seems to be beyond human strength. It is. But nothing is impossible for God.

The woman in the Bible with the issue of blood comes to mind. She maintained her faith in God for twelve years despite an illness that had left her bankrupt.

Mary Anne Cortus, Caucasian, maintained her faith and trust in God for 54 years, until the end. And, she affected everyone she met, no infected everyone, with a spirit of kindness and gentleness wherever she traveled.

Mary Anne exemplified the spirit of a real wonder woman in that she never gave in, nor bowed down, to the illness that had debilitated her life since childhood. Nor did she ever contemplate suicide. She knew her life was in the hands of God.

Life did not just throw rocks at Mary Anne. It threw boulders at her, one after another. Nevertheless, Mary Anne chose to live with gusto.

God said in His Word that we are responsible for not only raising our own children, but teaching anyone else who is in our household. But, to fulfill this divine assignment, there has to be not only an intellectual knowledge of God, but a strange faith, i.e. total trust, in Him and the truthfulness of His spoken command over one's life.

Mary Anne and I first met over ten years ago at the Lutheran church that we both attended. Even then, she was on the verge of being wheelchair bound for the purpose of mobility. Nevertheless, each Sunday that she was able to attend, she would greet you with a smile. And, she was always ready with witty come-backs during Bible study discussions.

They, male and female, shall dominate and rule over the earth. She shall help the man bring My purpose of Love on earth to fruition, through teaching others to love.

Genesis 1: 26-28; 2: 18, 22;

Back in the 50s and 60s, little girls grew up with the idea of being a super woman. Mary Anne's life exemplifies that of a true super hero.

She was diagnosed at the age of three with juvenile rheumatoid arthritis. Unable to truly pinpoint the disease, the doctors called it an auto immune blood disease, according to her husband. It was allegedly passed down genetically from her grandmother. While in college, she developed a thyroid condition that was derived from the autoimmune disease. The physician gave her what her husband calls "an atomic cocktail." It destroyed her thyroid gland. She required medication for the rest of her life. Later, she was diagnosed with Lupus.

She still did not quit.

Since childhood, Mary Anne's body had been under attack. Nevertheless, it did not stop her from living with gusto. Many may ask how? The Word of God answers.

Mary Anne was raised since childhood hearing about God. She grew up in the Lutheran faith. Her father was Episcopalian. Her father was the head of a church ministry. Therefore, Mary Anne heard about Jesus both at church and at home.

The attack on her body led her to become a research biochemist with an MBA. She desired to be involved in clinical trial tests due to her illness.

Eventually she became employed by a company that produced medical plastics designed for the blood industry.

Her husband William Cortus said that she was a different scientist because she believed in God. William said she confessed to him one day that the deeper she delved into science, the more

Parents are to teach their children and grandchildren the statutes and commandments of God because they prolong our life on earth,

Deuteronomy 6: 1-2, 5, 7:

she could see the ultimate design of God. As the various illnesses progressed, she grew stronger. Her husband said she told the family that she believed that regardless of the disappointments in life, she still believed in the promise of her heavenly reward. And, the worse her condition became on earth, the greater her reward would be in heaven as long as she stayed faithful to God's truth.

The wonder woman spirit in Mary Anne held firm. However, I am getting ahead of the story. There were hiccups in her life prior to her journey with her husband William [Bill].

Like many women, regardless of their faith in God, she originally chose an ungodly man for a husband. She was warned. She ignored them. The price was high.

Her first husband did not want Mary Anne to take his last name. She retained her maiden name. When she became pregnant with her first child, which the doctors had said was impossible, he wanted her to have an abortion. In fact, based on her medical history, the doctors said she would never get pregnant. In their opinion, she was a two-percenter due to the destruction of her thyroid.

She refused to have an abortion. Mary Anne knew her pregnancy was a 100-percenter—if you will—from God. Time would prove this truth. Her first son would have an impact in her latter life that was unexpected.

Finally, her first husband left. Mary Anne decided that she would be a single parent for the rest of her life.

God had other plans for her. I understand.

Prior to my second husband and I getting married, we both had decided that we would never get married again. He had been married twice. I had been married once. God had other plans. We got married.

Abandonment by Mary Anne's first husband was a blessing. Due to her faith, she would not have left him. She would have stayed because of her faith in God's word about the importance of marriage.

God handled the problem. The door was opened for Bill and Mary Anne.

They met at a Toast Master event, in which people learn how to speak before a crowd. Bill was very involved in this organization. On the other hand, Mary Anne simply wanted to meet people who were single parents. She did not want to go to a bar or such. She chose the Toast Master group. After her 10th speech, Bill gifted Mary Anne with her award.

When they first met and started sharing their history, Bill was impressed.

"I had always wanted a wife who lived for Jesus Christ," he said.

Their love story was not without wrinkles. For a while, it was an on and off relationship before he knew that Mary Anne was the wife for whom he had been searching.

Bill said he had attended a men's conference. During one of the messages, he knew Mary Anne should be his wife. He invited her to the graduation ceremony. Afterwards, he asked her to marry him. However, due to his former hesitation, he had to convince Mary Anne that he would never leave her again. And, that he would be a faithful husband and loving father to her son.

He promised. He asked her again. She said yes. They were married in 1995.

Both Bill and Mary Anne decided at the beginning to stay faithful to their vows regardless of the turn of events. They did. He kept his promise to the end of her life.

Marriage protects not only the husband and wife, but the children.

1 Corinthians 7: 13-14.

Bill's father was a loud person who believed in corporal punishment where you would beat the nonsense out of children.

"I swore to myself that I would never be like my father," Bill stated during our interview.

Bill kept that promise both as a faithful husband and a loving father right up to the end.

After they married, Mary Anne continued to defy the medical declarations about her ability to be a mother. They had three more children. And, as parents, they made sure that all their children attended both Christian and regular schools and were taught about God and the truth of His Word. Today, all their children believe in Jesus.

Perhaps this is why the devil was intent in destroying Mary Anne since childhood. God knew she would stay faithful to His commands in both her marriage and family.

All of her children were miracle births because they were high risk due to her illness. Several years prior to her death, their youngest son got hit by a car. He almost died. He remained in a coma for a time. After regaining consciousness and recuperating, he became an assistant caregiver for his mother. His goal was to become her primary caretaker. He enrolled in school with that intent. However, Mary Anne died while he was in school. Nevertheless, he is dedicating his career to helping people like his mother.

Mary Anne loved to travel. Bill's job allowed him to accumulate reward trips. He used them to take her wherever she wanted to go. She loved being out in the Red Wood Forest, the desert, Alaska, and the many other places where they traveled.

A husband and wife are expected to remain faithful to each other that they may raise godly seed, children who know and love God, Malachi 3: 15.

Sometimes she initiated the trip. More often, as time passed, it was Bill.

In addition, Mary Anne was a big sports fan. They attended many events right up to the end with the kindness of other people. Various equipment was needed to lift and transport her in and out of vehicles.

Despite her illness, Bill never regretted their marriage.

"I knew I had a divine purpose in her life, and she in mine," Bill stated. "We knew we were meant to be together."

Eventually, Mary Anne lost the ability to read. The numerous diseases had affected her eyesight. She still did not give up, especially on hearing the Word of God. Bill set it up for her to use a daily program called Jesus Calling. And, when she could no longer attend Sunday services, Bill would attend alone. Then he would go home and relate the message to Mary Anne.

"Our life was not perfect, but the love we shared made it possible to remain faithful," Bill said. "Her dedication to being independent and strong, and not clingy, made it possible for me to go out and do my work. And, through technology, I made sure that she could reach out to me."

"How did you do that?" I asked.

"I installed a tech doorbell at our house," Bill stated. When someone would ring the doorbell, it would ring my phone and I could see who it was and actually open the door."

True love has no boundaries as to what we will do for someone we love.

Mary Anne's illness had progressed to the point that she was almost one hundred percent dependent on others for her care. Bill decided to retire from his job to take care of her full time.

Given the various diseases that crippled her body, many people would have given up on life and God. What kept Mary Anne going?

The seed of Faith, that had been planted in the heart and soul of MaryAnne as a child, had grown to such proportions that it could not be up rooted by the travesties of life. Therefore, the more that the devil threw at her, the more reasons Mary Anne found to praise God.

Beatitudes, Matthew 5,6, 7.

In simple terms, her inbuilt I.P.S. system kept her going. She knew God, thus she knew her value, her identity, as His child. She knew she had a purpose in this life outside the diseases that kept attacking her physical body. And, she knew and relied upon her faith in God, which was the source of her strength.

It is written, no commanded, by God in how we are to live. However, when even the minor details of His Word are ignored, or not known, the cost can be beyond our imagination.

The path of my personal life was permanently changed by an unexpected event.

Who was in charge? You decide.

Chapter 7 Study Guide

1. Faith was the foundation of Mary Anne's life regardless of the trials she endured because she was taught this truth from childhood.
 - a. Do you think that knowing God's truth from childhood makes a difference in our faith walk?
 - i. If not, Discuss.

2. Mary Anne's life was not without trials and a multitude of afflictions. Nevertheless, Mary Anne took God at His Word. Despite her personal illness, she was a helper through love to both her husband and her children.
 - a. Do you know of someone whose journey was similar?

3. Do you think that her knowledge of God's Word was the key? Discuss.
