Chapter Three: The Dog Cane

His first prize floats to him. It is a Dog Cane!

The Dog Cane licks the Young Lad's cheek. The Young Lad can't help himself, and laughs, something he has not done in quite a while. The Dog Cane barks, "May I introduce myself; I am called Allegiance. Consider me your game changer to this sport called Grief. Take hold of my collar," he commands the Young Lad. "I am unconditional devotion and affection, and I will not let you drop the ball."

The Dog Cane wolfs, "Make no mistake, I am absolutely, forever loyal to you. It is in my very nature," as he shakes his Cane, as if he had a tail. "I hear you. I see you. I know you. I support you. To gain victory over this painful sport, keep that understanding in your Heart Center. When you start to stumble in your daily living, remember I am your loyal friend, and recall your friend's words for you to be comforted."

"We Barker Canes are each unique, but we are always a family. And always will be forever your family. We are devoted to you. Thus, we will always be within your grasp. As with us, so with your loved ones. While, right now, it may appear otherwise, that family bond can never be broken between you and your parents. Take comfort in that knowledge."

"You see, you are my most worthy companion. Yes, you indeed are absolutely worthwhile," the Dog Cane howls. "And that self-worth, my friend, has power that will help connect you to those you hold most dear. Because whether you want to admit it or not, those dear ones are your parents."

"We Barker Canes sparkle in all directions because of the unity of the Light that is inside of, guess who?" He points. "You!"

"So, know your journey is to be kind to yourself, seek harmony, find the wonder, have courage. Be happy and joyful. Listen to the wisdom that the Barker Canes bestow on you! Hear us in your Heart."
