It had been some time since grandpa, and Jeremy had been fishing. With all the schoolwork and activities, Jeremy didn't have much spare time. When grandpa phoned that morning to invite him to come along, he quickly grabbed his pole and tackle box, and gave his mom a quick kiss as she handed him a breakfast taco to eat on the way.

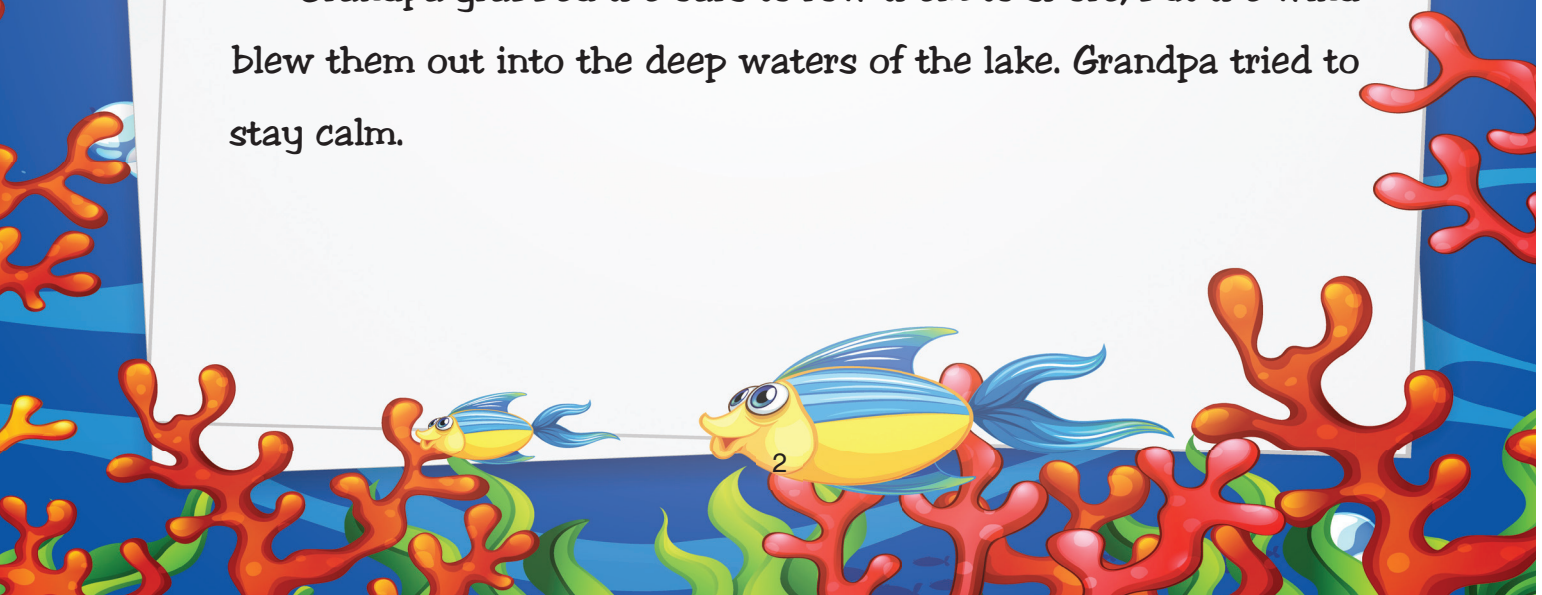

The lake was smooth as glass as they unloaded on this sunny day. Grandpa rowed to their favorite little cove, which was usually alive with fish. Listening to his grandpa whistle while he fished, Jeremy was happy he'd come along.

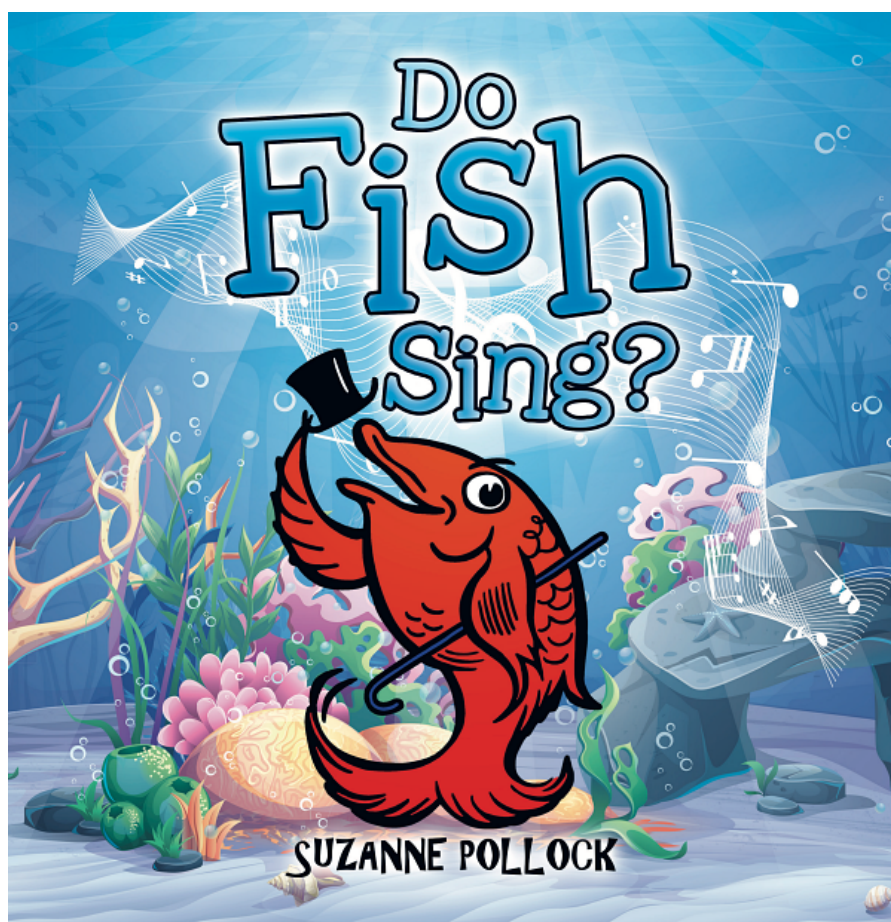

In a few minutes, they were filling the cooler for the fish fry later that evening at grandma's house. The whole family was coming, and Jeremy couldn't wait to see his crazy cousins.

But, a short time later, dark clouds filled the sky, and huge raindrops sounded like explosions, when they hit the metal frame of the boat. The guys put on their raincoats and kept fishing, but the rain began to fill their boat. Grabbing buckets, they dumped the water back into the lake. The strong wind tossed the boat around, and giant waves soaked them, while their fishing equipment slid from side to side.

Grandpa grabbed the oars to row them to shore, but the wind blew them out into the deep waters of the lake. Grandpa tried to stay calm.
