“What do you think we should do with our new brain?”

“How about the coffee table? Really show it off.”

“No way! It’ll ruin the finish.”

“Then what say we hang it from the dining room chandelier?”

“We already have six pinnas hanging there. Besides, that brain is going to drip much more fluid than those little pinnas.”

“You’re right. Doorstop?”

“Still no good. It’ll leave a spot on the carpet; or stain the tile in the kitchen if we use it there.”

“Well, we have to put it somewhere. It cost a fortune. More than we could really afford...especially after our pinna spree.”

“Let’s put it on a living room shelf with some of the bric-a-brac. Very unostentatious; it’s there, but not there.”

“What about the organ sweat?”

“That little drip will call attention to it. We’ll just let our guests notice it. And we’ll...”

“Yes, yes. We’ll act all casual about it; not our first big organ purchase.”

“Exciting. Let’s see how it looks next to the plastic fruit bowl.”

“How about...in the bowl. Forget the fruit.”

“Yes! It’ll be elegantly inconspicuous...and the organ sweat will stay in the bowl! We’ll empty it on an as needed basis.”

“And tomorrow we can start saving up to get a nice lung for the roof of the car!”

“Right! We’ll show those stuck-up Hamiltons a thing or two.”
