Chapter Two:

Announcing

Your

Pregnancy At

Christmas

My parents found out they were pregnant with me shortly before the Christmas of 1977. Their way of telling my paternal Grandmother was to give her a doll as a Christmas present along with a note that read, “For better or worse. This doll is redeemable in six months time for one genuine grandchild. Sorry we couldn’t have it ready for Christmas.”

Arleigh G. Zradicka

Give your partner a surprise t-shirt from Santa that says, “Merry Christmas, (name), you’re going to be a daddy!”

Heidi Gonzales and Kyston Anderson

Hang a “Baby’s First Christmas” ornament on the tree and see how long it takes to be noticed.

Tie a big red Christmas bow around your belly.

I bought two cute little newborn Christmas outfits on sale, stuck a note in each and mailed them off. In my mother-in-law’s, the note just read, “Guess what?” and for my mom, I wrote, “Merry Christmas to Grandma Johnson. Love, baby (last name).”

Stephanie

Hang rattles, baby bottles, and other infant décor on the tree.

Buy a stocking that you can decorate with baby items then write “Baby” on it and hang it with the others.

Decorate the tree with only pink and blue ornamental balls.

Place the pregnancy test between the angel's hands on top of the tree.

Hang your pregnancy test on the tree as an ornament.

If you have an electronic train that circles the Christmas tree, have each car contain a letter to spell out the word, “Baby.” On Christmas night, have the train go around the tree with the pregnancy test either taped to the top or in the caboose.

We found out we were expecting our first child just days before Christmas. Since my parents didn’t know we were trying, we decided to surprise them on Christmas.

We bought a baby outfit for my parents that read, “Grandma’s Little Sweetheart.” When we gave the gift to my mom, she looked at it for several minutes. Once she realized what it meant, she screamed and started running around showing everyone she could find.
