How A String Bikini Can Bring In $2000 Every Weekend If It Doesn't Get Wet.

Someone figured this one out long before we asked the question: "What's the best way to sell hot dogs?" In Miami, and other towns across the US, the local girls have the answer.

On the street corners, lovely young college girls, dressed in string bikinis are selling hot dogs like there is no tomorrow. When asked why she didn't get a real job and get in out of the sun and gawking stares of the passersby, one sales lady answered, "Because I bring in $1500 to $2000 every weekend out here, and the rest of my week is free to study."

There's no sex involved, except the eye candy kind, and as long as the company behind the pretty girls has a business permit, no crime has been committed. Except perhaps that it's a crying shame you hadn't thought of it first!

It doesn't matter what you are selling, hire one or two nice looking women, dress them with less, and you'll attract all the attention you need. What better advertising can you ask for? Older men too seem to be quite sympathetic to the girls' "hardships in the hot summer sun". They tip well and remember to return the next day for lunch in the same spot! I guess, the desire to look never gets old.

Choose your sales force well. A cheerful smile and a kind heart weigh in about 50/50 with a gorgeous body and the willingness to show it off. The only requirement left for your business is a day of sunshine, because if it rains, your hot dog stand is all wet!

Body Parts You Can Sell In A Pinch

It's not Dr. Frankenstein calling; it's not even the mad scientist next door! It could be your friendly neighborhood sperm bank or hospital where you can donate what you don't need at the moment to make or save a life.

Blood plasma is vital to the lives of many children born with autoimmune disorders, and is the base for vaccines needed around the world. Not all towns have plasma donation centers, and they do look for people who are willing to make a serious commitment to donating, therefore they pay a modest fee for your time and effort.

Wig makers have traditionally bought long, healthy hair, although the synthetic materials are big now too.

Call your large hospitals and fertility clinics to see where the nearest sperm bank is, or look in the newspaper.

If you pass the in depth testing and profiling you might be selected as a surrogate mother, and get paid to process someone's egg and sperm in your body.

There are also sleep research and other medical testing done at times that pay small amounts of money.

If you're not ready to part with a piece of your body, perhaps you'd consider wearing a tattoo that advertises some famous store, hotel or casino? Have you seen boxers sporting temporary tattoos for a fee? I've heard they can bring in $25,000 for a body ad, if the wearer is famous enough.

To save money on final expenses, you can donate your body to science and the organs to patients who need transplants. In this way, you will have no burial costs, no need for a cemetery plot and no burden left for your family.

As stem cell research becomes more traditional, you may even be able to sell the placenta cells from your baby's birth, or carry multiple embryos for a few weeks for harvesting. (I'm not promoting this, just observing that opportunities for new ideas are coming up every day.)
