INTRODUCTION

Mrs. P could do anything. All the teenagers in our church youth group loved her. Nobody created better mini pizzas or tacos than Mrs. P, and her homemade lemonade quenched dozens of thirsty kids over dozens of summers. She offered her basement game room to our group whenever we wanted it. She cooked and cleaned when we held our usual fund raising suppers, no matter the day or choice of menu.

When it came time to plan our “Prayer” retreat, every hand raised in favor or asking Mrs. P if she’d be one of our adult sponsors. Never mind that all her own kids had moved way beyond the youth group age.

“Sure,” she told our youth pastor, “I’d be happy to help out.”

And she did! Before the trip she offered her experienced insight when organizing our groceries. During the retreat, Mrs. P prepared meal after delicious meal and tended to the chores while we had our big group meetings about intercessory prayer and agape love in the adjacent room. During our breakout sessions with our prayer partners, she’d ply us with warm cookies and beverages.

But none of us ever imagined we'd see Mrs. P lean her broom against the cabin wall and join our last session about prayer being a two-way street, about us needing to be honest with God for full communication. Mrs. P asked for a prayer partner and we saw her huddle up with our youth pastor.

Later that evening we all gathered around the usual campfire, safe in the warmth and shadows it offered. Usually Mrs. P silently listened to all of us share about the day's discoveries and praises, but tonight she had something to say.

"I've always believed in God and always been a church worker. But until this weekend with you, I never knew God in a personal way or in a conversational way."

That was all she divulged, but it was enough. A lady well into her sixties, and a life's tenure of service in God's community behind her, and yet Mrs. P had never chosen to cultivate that essential, personal line of communication with her Father.

She's not alone.

My prayer for you is that this book will help you live and love in a closer relationship with our Lord, Jesus, and the Holy Spirit.
