ALL THE WAY

Friday night Jo makes excuses for why he can't come hang out with his friends. But Saturday they know he has off, he told them earlier in the week, so when he begs off again he can sense the disappointment and dismissal immediately. Jo is certain it's only a matter of time before he's told to fuck off and he's starting to think he'll be lucky if he gets away with only that.

He just needs a few days to think, just needs to make it to Sunday when he can fuck Matt and get it out of his system. But the time he normally spends thinking about random things has suddenly switched over to Matt and Bianca. He can't stop thinking about them, in fact, and that's bad and he knows it. They're still married and he's still just a fuck. But he can't help it, they're both so nice to him and he can remember every detail of their (gorgeous) bodies with alarming clarity. He's jerking himself off every couple hour when he's not at work (and once in a bathroom stall even there) and most of the time it's with a finger up his ass. He wants something more substantial in there and keeps thinking about some of the vegetables in his fridge and various objects around the store, but he'll be damned if he winds up being one of those guys who goes to the hospital with crazy shit stuck in his ass.

Besides, he thinks, with a little tremor in his gut, I really want Matt to be my first, not a cucumber. And damn if everything about that admission isn't humiliating.

It's Saturday night and he's rubbing his balls with two fingers jammed up himself, trying to relive everything about his last night with them, when another realization strikes. He thinks about the scars on Bianca's pussy and realizes he's seen them before and he knows exactly where.

He lies there, knees up against his chest, blinking at the cracked ceiling. He feels rude even thinking it about Bianca, but all the sudden he's remembering all sorts of things- how deep her voice is, that her hands are a little bigger than he'd expect, and even the things she's said- But I'm a little different, aren't I?

His dick goes soft with the shock, and after a moment of indecision he takes his fingers out, washes his hands, and then sits down with his laptop. It only takes a few judicious Google searches- most of the image results gruesome, his boner is so dead now- before he's proved it to himself. Right there on the internet are photos of the exact same scars Bianca has, right next to the word “transgender”.

He’d looked up pictures of the surgery a couple years ago, just out of curiosity about how such a thing would even work, but now....

Jo sits there, staring at the screen, thinking why didn’t they tell me?

It’s not like it really matters at this point- he’s done more with Matt (who is all man) than he has with Bianca anyway. But the thought that they don’t trust him hurts way more than he wants to admit. He had thought they at least liked him that much, even if only as a fling.

He shouldn’t go over at all, honestly. He has Bianca’s phone number entered his phone, he could just text her and cancel, say he’s got other obligations. He needs to keep his friends close, not getting laid with a guy old enough to his dad and a woman who doesn’t trust him.

But he knows he won’t cancel. He wants it too much. So, he just promises himself that after this he’ll cool it down. He’ll back off. They’ll have had their fun, and he’ll have satisfied his curiosity, and they can all go their separate ways.

This is an excellent erotic romance novel, on two individuals who encounter conflict, as well has different opinion in making a wise revolution on the issues among both of them. Hurry get a copy, you will enjoy reading it.
